Entry #1	Movie: 18x2 Beyond Youthful Days
Review: "This review may contain spoilers. This film beautifully encapsulates the protagonist's yearning for something that never came true, while she on the other hand feels sadness for something that never could be, so she chooses to try and spare him the grief. And also the parallels between her travels, meeting them as kind strangers, and his, 18 years later. So that "The people we meet on our travels leave something in our hearts" came true for them. Thankfully I didn't need subtitles for half of the movie because it got very blurry for the whole last 30 mins "

Entry #6	Movie: Panda Plan
Review: "This movie REALLY sucks. It puzzles me why he would act on such bad movies nowadays."

Entry #7	Movie: Mufasa: The Lion King
Review: "Saw it in IMAX and 3D, and the visuals are extremely impressive. The problem with photorealism however is that you lose most of the emotion from the faces unfortunately. And it being a musical would work in my opinion, if the songs weren't so mid Unfortunately for Mufasa he is an A+ wingman but his game is just too strong"

Entry #8	Movie: The Shining
Review: "A man slowly deranging into madness, constant suspense amplified by the amazing sound design. So many iconic scenes for a reason. Jack couldn't finish one job nor the other "

Entry #10	Movie: Event Horizon
Review: "This review may contain spoilers. An interesting premise with some gory visuals. A fun space horror watch for sure. I love how Miller calmly argues with a person whose eyes are gouged out and is literally possessed by demons. They see the previous crew cannibalizing each other and their reaction was like "well that's not great""

Entry #12	Movie: No Country for Old Men
Review: "Might be one of the most terrifying and accurate villains: A ruthless, cold killing machine with a total disregard for life. There is always great suspense and tension building up every time Chigurh approaches a character, paired with clever yet straightforward cinematography and a unique ending to the story."

Entry #14	Movie: The Lighthouse
Review: "A surreal film that manages to create a unique atmosphere with intricate details and amazing cinematography. Killer performances by both. Such a simple film in its core, but incredibly well executed. Get this man his steak asap"

Entry #15	Movie: Romeo + Juliet
Review: "An assault on the senses with a few memorable scenes and a good cast. Exit Music was a killer choice though, gotta give them that"

Entry #16	Movie: City of God
Review: "Absolutely superb storytelling and well written characters all around. This film really hits deep, both with tragic stories and gruesome scenes that manage to depict the suffering and desperation that the children grow up in and get confronted with. Huge respect especially to the child actors performances, unfortunate how they were essentially exploited in hindsight and didn't receive the deserved success afterward."

Entry #17	Movie: Lost in Translation
Review: "A film about feeling overwhelmed and lost in life. I do feel that there is quite some lost potential in the execution. Disliked how unnecessarily badly and stereotypically Japanese people are portrayed for the purpose of cheap gags? Bob gave me big Harrison Ford vibes. Also, Johansson was 17 while filming? Yikes. Maybe it wasnt the best idea watching this right after Portrait of a Lady on Fire"
